Acknowledgments

As I look back at the long process of producing this book from the initial research for my doctoral dissertation through revising and editing the manuscript, I am struck by just how very many people and institutions gave me help, support, and encouragement along the way. Though I cannot possibly thank each individual who contributed to the book, it would be the ultimate in ingratitude if I did not acknowledge the contributions of a number of those who made this work possible.

Pride of place must go to Robert M. Kingdon, doctoral advisor extraordinaire, who shaped my scholarship in ways great and small. From his nearly legendary seminars, to tutorials in paleography, to obtaining project assistantships for me so I could pay the bills, to ongoing support and encouragement after graduation, Professor Kingdon has been a tremendous inspiration and a real friend to me for the past eighteen years.

My initial research in Paris was made possible by a Fulbright-Hays grant, which enabled me to spend a year there collecting sources and doing basic research. While in Paris, I participated in a very valuable orientation program sponsored by Columbia University’s Graduate Research Institute at Reid Hall. The staff at Reid Hall and the Franco-American Commission for Educational Exchange also helped me to understand and work through the French bureaucratic system, a rather intimidating prospect for an American. My thanks to all in both programs.

The Graduate School of the University of Wisconsin provided me with an Alumni Research Grant, which enabled me to work on my dissertation full-time. I was also assisted at this time by the wonderful staff of the University of Wisconsin–Madison Memorial Library Rare Book Room. Upon completion of my degree, I taught for two years at Calvin College and enjoyed a great deal of support from my colleagues in the history department, especially Doug Howard and his family, and from Richard Muller in the seminary. The staff at the H. Henry Meeter Center for Calvin Studies and the Hekman Library, especially Paul Field, have been remarkably helpful on more occasions than I can mention before, during, and after my stint at Calvin.

I have since received considerable support from Central Connecticut State University, which has enabled me to return to France twice for additional research, courtesy of a number of CSU–AAUP Research Grants and additional funding provided by Karen Beyard, then vice president of academic affairs. My colleagues in the history department have without exception given me their support and encouragement in the midst of the struggle to complete the book while teaching a full course load. Heather Prescott—who put up with me while we shared an office for my first few years at Central—Jay Bergman, and Norton Mezvinski have been particularly supportive of my work.

In Europe, I benefited from the assistance of a number of individuals. The staff at the Bibliothèque de la Société de l'Histoire du Protestantisme français have been very helpful on many occasions over the last decade. Olivier Fatio and his family extended their hospitality to my family so I could pursue research in Geneva. Michel Reulos was extraordinarily generous with his time and insights into the development of the Discipline. Above all else, however, I must here acknowledge my profound debt to Bernard Roussel. Not only did he and his wife make my family welcome in France, not only did he guide my work while in Paris and provide crucial assistance at many points along the way, but his work in preparing a critical edition of the Acts of the National Synods and of the various editions of the Discipline and his invitation to contribute to the work in whatever ways I could provided the linchpin for my entire analysis. His generosity in giving me access to his transcriptions and microfilms has more than anything else enabled me to work out the details of the development of the Discipline and the institutional structures of the French Reformed Church. Of course, any inaccuracies or errors in this book remain my own.

And last but far from least, there is my family: my mother, Adele Sunshine, and my father, Nathan Sunshine, who passed away just four months before this book made it into print; my mother-in-law, Kathleen Elsner, and my late father-in-law, Ed Elsner, who is sorely missed; my brother-in-law, David Elsner, who lived with us during graduate school and who has supplied laughter, friendship, and tea over the years; my son, Brendan, who waited until the dissertation was completed to arrive; my daughter, Elizabeth, whose first year of life was spent in Paris and who has been waiting to move back ever since; and especially my lovely wife, Lynn, who believed in me when I didn’t and without whose unending patience, love, and encouragement I would never have even entered graduate school, much less completed this book. My most profound thanks and love to you all.
